

High Two - Unit One - Summary

There are many forms of political systems prevalent in different countries of the world for a long time, like democracy and republic. Straightforwardly, democracy is a form of government where people choose their government and the majority rules' voice. Republic refers to the state wherein the ultimate power lies in the people's hands and their elected representatives. Here in this reading, we are going to read the political slogan of the two candidates for the upcoming city mayorship election.

Daniel Baker, who is a Democrat, is one of the leading candidates for city mayorship. As the ex-mayor of the city, this candidate believes that his priority should be the enhancement of the educational system since, in the future, there will be created millions of new job positions, and society will need an educated workforce. He also believes the relationship between homelessness and street violence is more complicated than it appears at first glance, but we could declare they are directly connected. Thus, his second priority will be providing good houses for people.

Being referred to the right-wing, Gabriela Soto, as a Republican, has an entirely different politics. Despite Daniel, she uses threatening the offenders directly to bring peace back to the neighborhoods. She believes that violence should be used against violence. Thus, her priority is increasing the number of cops in the street to maintain social stability. Taxation has a crucial role in the modern economy. As her second priority, she promised that she would lower the taxes to revive more businesses if she is elected.
