

High Two - Unit Three - Summary

Have you ever asked yourselves, Why have you been born? Have you thought about the things you've done during your life up to now? How about the importance of your being in the world? All these questions are supposed to be answered in the film named "Wonderful Life," directed by Frank Capra in 1946.

The movie starts differently with a weird scene of a suicide attempt; George Bailey, the film's main character, wants to end his life by jumping into the river. He's tired of his entire life and failures. His mind is hugely overwhelmed by many negative impressions and "WHY" questions. Trying to put an end to his life, a good genie named Clarence appears and distracts his mind! Maybe this genie could dissuade him!

In the genie's opinion, the primary purpose of suiciding was underestimating! George thought that he'd been a useless man during his life, while he could have had positive decisions. The main role of Clarence, the good genie of the film, is defined here. Bringing some real example, the angel wanted to prove that whatever he thinks about himself is vain and wrong. Adding these real examples, Clarence indicates: "George, have you ever thought how miserable your mom would be if you were not born?! Have you known that your wife owes her happiness to you?! And most importantly, you have saved the lives of thousands of soldiers by saving of life a war hero, your brother, in an accident!

It seems that our angel has been succeeded in persuading George. He revealed to George other and positive aspects of his life that he had never thought of.

In conclusion, we should understand the importance of ourselves in others' lives, even when we think oppositely. Have you ever done a valuable thing in your life up to now, and you are proud of it ?!
