

High Three - Unit Ten - Summary

By definition, intuition is the inherent ability to connect with one's inner self. It seems as if as time goes by, intuition is thought of less. Intuition is tricky because it can be hard to notice exactly when intuition is different from reason or emotion. In this reading, we are going to explain the real story of two young couples who listened to their gut feeling and helped an aged man who was standing beside the street under the burning sun. This story concludes that sometimes trusting your intuition could change your life trend.

On a sunny and hot day, Thain and his wife Aurora were heading to buy their favorite second-hand furniture, which was a chest of drawers from a yard sale. It's morning, and they were in a hurry since buyers shouldn't arrive too late to get the best chance. Seeing an eccentric old man on their way, Aurora asked her husband to stop and help that guy. Thain nagged not only they are late but also helping this strange man will put them in a dangerous situation. He said that's a gut feeling. Indicating that women have intuition too, Aurora finally persuaded him to stop and picked that man up.

While trying to explain his bad condition, the old man said: "I am a country traveler, and since I am a diabetic person, I need to prepare insulin from the nearest drugstore; otherwise, I would risk my life. I'd thank you for getting me there and then drop me at the bus station to continue the rest of my trip. I hope I could do your favor up when I got home."

Not only young couples returned home disappointed, but they also missed the opportunity to get a chest of drawers. A few months later, when Thain and Aurora came back from a short vacation, they found a strange letter without returning address from that old man who they had helped three months ago. A check for 50.000$ was enclosed with this letter as a token of his gratitude!
